The importance of maintaining a healthy indoor climate

The indoor climate has a substantial impact on our well-being, productivity and health. With wooden floors adapting to the indoor climate, suboptimal conditions affect humans and parquet floors alike. If conditions are very dry, gaps, deformations or even cracks may appear. If the air is particularly humid, the wood absorbs excess amounts of humidity and may start to swell and warp.

Fidbox monitors your room climate

About Fidbox

The Fidbox measuring device records the room temperature in the screed and the wood. Installed underneath a parquet strip, the box is invisible to the naked eye. Data are automatically recorded every eight hours.

Minimum floor size for installing a Fidbox

The smallest individual room size in which a Fidbox can be installed is 30 m², the minimum total parquet area 50 m² – no matter whether you have fully bonded parquet and/or underfloor heating.

How do I access the data?

The data saved in the Fidbox can be read any time by wireless transmission.

Current room climate data can be accessed via the Fidbox app – an instant and convenient way of getting all the data you need. Should one of the values be suboptimal, the app will suggest ways to improve the room climate.

Parquet manufacturers and installers who work with Fidboxes can read and provide you with long-term measurements, i.e. the entire range of data recorded since the initial installation.
